

when dealing with specific uses of spectrum by the public which follow with the filing of licenses and fees, the public should be afforded protection. At current, the FCC charges 80 dollars for a General Mobile Radio Service license, yet affords the licensee little or no protection from interference from illegal usage. Such illegal usage was the FCC blunder of creating the Family Radio service, and allowing GMRS channels into those FRS radios. Knowing the radio costs 30 dollars, people are not investing in the licenses and it causes GMRS licensees to deal with interference on a regular basis. The GMRS license fee should be reduced by at least half or more, and enforcement should be available to all licensees who are legal, whether public safety agencies, Nextel, or a GMRS licensee. Thank you for taking my comment.
